Dominik Doemer

As the Supreme Court wraps up its term, there are a number of major decisions to come. Among them is a decision in the case Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo and Relentless v. Department of Commerce, on whether to overrule a foundational 1984 precedent on the power of government agencies, Chevron v. Natural Resources Defense Council. For reporters covering this case, the following experts are available to provide commentary and analysis on the case and its implications:

DONALD MOYNIHAN

University of Michigan-Ann Arbor

Moynihan's research focuses on how government administrative processes work. His writings include how bureaucracy, confusing paperwork, and complex regulations often introduce delay and frustration into our experiences with government agencies. He also studies the behavioral effects of efforts to improve public sector outcomes through government reform. Moynihan serves governments and international organizations interested in public sector performance and advocacy groups interested in reducing administrative burdens in different policy areas.

PETER M. SHANE

The Ohio State University

Shane's research and teaching focus on administrative and constitutional law, with a particular focus on the presidency and the separation of powers. He has written about the Chevron doctrine for both general and academic audiences, including in Washington Monthly: As the Supreme Court Reconsiders "Chevron Deference," Will Its Ruling Be Monumental or "Meh?"
